CO #1: Selfies - Script

So what is a selfie?

A picture of yourself. Feel you take it in the mirror with your phone camera, and you post it on the social media.

How often do you personally take selfies?

If it's like an occasion, like happy New Year, like happy Thanksgiving. Around once a week. On my Snapchat account, I Snapchat a lot. Probably… more than I should. Maybe like once a day, no… once a day is a little too much. I take selfies quite a lot, but I don't upload them, like I just take a selfie then I delete it.

And when someone is known for posting a lot of selfies, what's the perception of that person?

That they're obsessed with themselves. Conceited people, I mean they're like: "Oh, look at me!"

What is the point? Why are people taking pictures of themselves and posting them online?

I don't know. That's the question of the ages. Because if you're good-looking, you can become famous! You want to get all the likes. The whole thing is likes. When I post something, that's like I'm on the red carpet, I've done something cool. I personally don't see the point of posting selfies, however I will post selfies that I look really good in, because you want people to see that you look pretty.

Why?

Why? Because self-esteem. As a teenage girl, when you post a selfie, it's become a huge self-esteem booster, especially with all the likes on Instagram. It's crazy because there are girls that will cry over the amount of likes that they get, and if the one guy that they like doesn't like their picture, then it's like the end of the world.
